SOHO Fashion Boutique

Location: SOHO, New York City, NY

The design challenge is to research garment construction techniques that are used in both fashion and architecture fields and try to apply the techniques to a design project. I used Revit, Rhino, PS and AI in this project. Also I experienced 3d printing and learned the importance of technology in today's design field. The fashion boutique design is based on garment technique research. The site is about 8200 square feet.

Hi! My name's Jialu Zhang. I am designer based in NYC.

I graduated from Indiana University with a Bachelor's degree in Interior Design.

Now I am a MFA Design & Technology student at Parsons School of Design in NYC.

My interests lies in design the products and spaces which generate positive effects on human beings.

I enjoy the process of design, no matter in interior design or other design fields, starting from brainstorming, conceptualizing, and prototyping, to testing and problem solving.
